Weir v. Commissioner, 109 F.2d 996 (6th Cir. 1940)

To deduct a loss as a transaction entered into for profit under Section 23(e)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code, the taxpayer's primary motive must be to make a profit, not merely an incidental hope of profit subordinate to a personal or hobby-related goal.

Summary

The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals addressed whether a taxpayer could deduct losses incurred from guaranteeing the debts of a company in which they were a stockholder. The court held that to be deductible as a transaction entered into for profit, the taxpayer's primary motive in entering the transaction must be for profit, not personal satisfaction. The court found that the taxpayer's primary motive was to improve their neighborhood and social standing, not to generate a profit, and thus the losses were not deductible.

Facts

The taxpayer, Mr. Weir, guaranteed the debts of a company called the Grand Riviera Hotel Company, in which he owned stock. He also purchased stock in the company. The Grand Riviera Hotel Company went bankrupt, and the taxpayer had to make good on his guarantee, resulting in a financial loss. Mr. Weir sought to deduct this loss on his income tax return as a loss incurred in a transaction entered into for profit under Section 23(e)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Procedural History

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue disallowed the deduction. The Board of Tax Appeals upheld the Commissioner's determination. The taxpayer appealed to the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Issue(s)

Whether the taxpayer's losses, incurred as a result of guaranteeing the debts of a corporation in which he held stock, are deductible as losses incurred in a transaction entered into for profit under Section 23(e)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code when his primary motive was not to generate a profit.

Holding

No, because the taxpayer's primary motive was not to make a profit but to benefit his neighborhood and social standing, the losses are not deductible as losses incurred in a transaction entered into for profit.

Court's Reasoning

The court emphasized that to deduct a loss under Section 23(e)(2), the transaction must be “primarily” for profit. While the hope of a financial return is always present in business transactions, it cannot be the dominant purpose if the deduction is to be allowed. The court reviewed the facts and found that Mr. Weir’s primary motive in guaranteeing the company’s debts was to benefit the community and enhance his own social standing, not to generate a profit. The court noted that Mr. Weir testified he was trying to “help the neighborhood” and testified to the importance of maintaining his standing within the community. The court stated, “A hope of profit, though present, is not enough if it is secondary to some other dominant purpose.” The court noted that while improvement of the neighborhood and preservation of the taxpayer’s social standing would indirectly benefit the corporation, it was not the “prime thing” in the taxpayer’s motives.

© 2025 SCOTUSreports.com. All rights reserved.

Practical Implications

This case clarifies the importance of establishing a primary profit motive when seeking to deduct losses under Section 23(e)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code. Taxpayers must demonstrate that their main goal was to generate a profit, not to pursue personal interests or hobbies. This requires a careful examination of the taxpayer’s intent, actions, and surrounding circumstances. Subsequent cases have cited Weir to reinforce the principle that the profit motive must be the driving force behind the transaction to justify the deduction of losses. Evidence of consistent losses, lack of business acumen, or a strong personal connection to the activity can undermine a claim of primary profit motive.

© 2025 SCOTUSreports.com. All rights reserved.