31 T.C. 356 (1958)

The Tax Court will find tax fraud when a taxpayer consistently underreports substantial income and engages in conduct indicating an intent to evade taxes, such as failing to keep records and attempting to influence witnesses.

Summary

In Pigman v. Commissioner, the U.S. Tax Court addressed deficiencies in income tax and additions to tax for fraud. Luerana Pigman, a private investigator and advisor, failed to report substantial income received from a wealthy widow over several years. The Court found that the taxpayer's consistent underreporting of income, lack of adequate records, and attempts to influence a witness established fraud with intent to evade taxes. The Court sustained the Commissioner's determination of deficiencies and additions to tax for fraud, as well as penalties for failure to file declarations of estimated tax and substantial underestimation of estimated tax. This case highlights the importance of accurate record-keeping, the consequences of substantial underreporting of income, and the impact of actions indicative of fraudulent intent.

Facts

Luerana Pigman, the taxpayer, was a private investigator and advisor. Between 1947 and 1952, she received approximately $250,000 from a wealthy widow, Fannie May Scoville, for her services. Pigman did not include these sums on her income tax returns. During these years, Pigman was also engaged in the real estate business, owned and operated a beauty shop, and bought and sold stocks. She maintained several bank accounts and safe-deposit boxes. The funds from Scoville were primarily transferred in cash, and Pigman did not maintain any records of these payments. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue determined deficiencies in Pigman's income tax for each year, along with additions to tax for fraud, failure to file declarations of estimated tax, and substantial underestimation of estimated tax.

Procedural History

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued a notice of deficiency to Luerana Pigman, asserting tax deficiencies and additions to tax for the years 1947 through 1952. Pigman petitioned the U.S. Tax Court to contest the deficiency determination and associated penalties. The Tax Court conducted a trial, heard testimony, reviewed evidence, and ultimately issued a decision upholding the Commissioner's findings.

Issue(s)

1. Whether Pigman omitted taxable income from her returns for the years 1947-1952.

© 2025 SCOTUSreports.com. All rights reserved.

2. Whether any part of the deficiency for each of the years in question was due to fraud with intent to evade tax.

3. Whether the deficiencies for the years 1947 through 1951 were barred by the statute of limitations.

4. Whether Pigman was liable for additions to tax under section 294 (d)(1)(A) and (d)(2) for failure to file declarations of estimated tax and substantial underestimation of estimated tax, respectively, for all the years in question.

Holding

1. Yes, because Pigman failed to meet her burden of proving error in the Commissioner's determination, the Court held that she understated her taxable income.

2. Yes, because the Court found clear and convincing evidence of fraudulent intent, based on Pigman's actions, the Court found that a part of the deficiency for each year was due to fraud.

3. No, because the Court found that Pigman's returns were fraudulent with intent to evade tax, the statute of limitations did not apply.

4. Yes, because Pigman failed to provide reasonable cause for not filing declarations of estimated tax and did not file the declarations, she was liable for the additions to tax.

Court's Reasoning

The court found that Pigman's primary defense—that the funds received from Scoville were gifts or held in trust for charitable purposes—lacked credibility. The court emphasized the conflicting testimony and the absence of supporting evidence for Pigman's claims. The court highlighted that © 2025 SCOTUSreports.com. All rights reserved.