

Estate of Jeanne Lepoutre, Deceased, Raymond Henri Lepoutre, Administrator, Petitioner v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Respondent, 62 T. C. 84; 1974 U. S. Tax Ct. LEXIS 176; 62 T. C. No. 10 (1974)

One-half of the community property acquired under French law is includable in the gross estate of a deceased spouse who was domiciled in the United States at the time of death.

Summary

Jeanne Lepoutre and her husband, French citizens, entered into an antenuptial agreement adopting the French community property system before emigrating to the U. S. Upon Jeanne's death in Connecticut, the Commissioner included half of the community property in her gross estate. The court held that under French law, Jeanne owned an undivided half-interest in the community property, which was transferred at her death and thus includable in her estate under U. S. tax law. The court rejected the argument that the husband's usufruct should reduce the includable value, emphasizing that the estate tax is on the transfer of the estate, not on specific inheritances.

Facts

Jeanne Lepoutre and Raymond Joseph Marie Lepoutre, both French citizens, married in France in 1936 and entered into an antenuptial agreement adopting the French community property system. They emigrated to the U. S. in 1946, became naturalized citizens in 1952, and were domiciled in Connecticut at Jeanne's death in 1966. The community property, derived from the husband's earnings and the community's income, was worth $719,731. 27 at her death. The Commissioner determined a deficiency in Jeanne's estate tax by including half of this community property in her gross estate.

Procedural History

The Commissioner assessed a deficiency in federal estate tax against Jeanne Lepoutre's estate, prompting the estate's administrator to file a petition with the U. S. Tax Court. The parties agreed to dispose of some issues, leaving the court to decide the includability of the community property in Jeanne's estate and whether the value of the husband's usufruct should reduce the includable amount.

Issue(s)

1. Whether one-half of the community property of Jeanne and her husband is includable in Jeanne's estate under section 2033 of the Internal Revenue Code?
2. If any portion of the community property is includable, whether the value of the husband's usufruct reduces the interest in community property includable in Jeanne's estate under section 2033?

Holding

1. Yes, because under French law, Jeanne had an undivided one-half interest in the community property at the time of her death, which was transferred upon her death.
2. No, because the husband's usufruct does not reduce the value of Jeanne's interest in the community property for estate tax purposes.

Court's Reasoning

The court applied French law to determine Jeanne's interest in the community property, as it was acquired during their French domicile. Under French law, both spouses were co-owners of an undivided half of the community property, despite the husband's management rights. The antenuptial agreement did not alter this ownership during Jeanne's life; it only specified the disposition upon death, akin to a testamentary disposition. The court cited Estate of Paul M. Vandenhoeck, stating that each spouse's interest in community property under French law is present and equal. The court also rejected the petitioner's argument based on New Mexico community property law, noting that French law provides the wife with more rights, including testamentary disposition. For the second issue, the court held that the husband's usufruct does not reduce the value of Jeanne's estate because it is a transfer at death, similar to statutory interests like dower or courtesy, which are taxable under U. S. estate tax law.

Practical Implications

This decision clarifies that for U. S. estate tax purposes, community property acquired under foreign law by a U. S. domiciliary at death must be included in the gross estate according to the foreign law's definition of ownership. Attorneys handling estates of individuals with foreign-acquired property should carefully analyze the applicable foreign law to determine the decedent's interest. The ruling also reinforces that statutory or contractual rights of survivors, like usufruct, do not reduce the value of the decedent's estate for tax purposes. This case may affect estate planning for couples with foreign community property, emphasizing the need for prenuptial agreements that consider both foreign and U. S. estate tax implications. Subsequent cases, such as those involving community property from other countries, may reference this decision when assessing the includability of such property in U. S. estates.
