

Estate of Anthony P. Kearns, Deceased, Marie C. Kearns, Executrix, and Marie C. Kearns, Petitioners v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Respondent, 73 T. C. 1223 (1980); 1980 U. S. Tax Ct. LEXIS 160

The retroactive application of tax law amendments to installment sales is constitutional, applying to payments received after the amendment's effective date.

Summary

In Estate of Kearns v. Commissioner, the U. S. Tax Court addressed whether the Tax Reform Act of 1976's amendments to the minimum tax provisions could constitutionally be applied retroactively to gains from an installment sale executed in 1972 but with payments received in 1976. The court upheld the retroactivity, citing precedent that installment payments are taxed under the law in effect at the time of recognition. This ruling emphasizes that taxpayers electing installment sales must account for potential changes in tax law affecting their tax liability on received payments.

Facts

Anthony P. Kearns and Marie C. Kearns entered into an installment sale contract in 1972. Anthony died in January 1976, and Marie, as executrix, reported a 1976 installment payment of $48,000 on their joint tax return, resulting in a recognized gain of $47,490. This payment was received before October 4, 1976, the enactment date of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, which retroactively amended the minimum tax provisions for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

Procedural History

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue determined a deficiency in the Kearns' 1976 income taxes due to the application of the amended minimum tax. The Kearns petitioned the U. S. Tax Court, challenging the retroactive application of the Tax Reform Act's amendments. The Tax Court followed its precedent in Buttke v. Commissioner and upheld the retroactivity of the amendments.

Issue(s)

1. Whether the retroactive application of the Tax Reform Act of 1976's amendments to the minimum tax provisions to the installment payment received in 1976 is constitutional.
2. Whether the amended minimum tax provisions apply to installment contracts entered into prior to the enactment of the Tax Reform Act if payments are received during 1976.

Holding

1. Yes, because the retroactive application of tax law amendments to installment sales is constitutional, as established in Buttke v. Commissioner.

2. Yes, because the amended minimum tax provisions apply to payments received in 1976, regardless of when the contract was entered into.

Court's Reasoning

The court's decision was grounded in the principle that installment payments are taxed under the law in effect at the time of recognition, as articulated in Snell v. Commissioner. The court reasoned that taxpayers electing installment sales assume the risk that tax laws may change, affecting their tax liability on received payments. The court rejected the petitioners' argument that the retroactivity was "harsh and oppressive," citing Buttke v. Commissioner, which upheld the constitutionality of retroactive application of the Tax Reform Act's changes to section 56. The court distinguished between the timing of the contract and the timing of the payments, emphasizing that the tax law in effect at the time of payment governs.

Practical Implications

This decision underscores the importance for taxpayers to consider potential changes in tax law when electing installment sales. It informs legal practice that the tax law applicable to installment payments is that in effect at the time of payment, not contract execution. Businesses and individuals engaging in installment sales must be aware of the risk of tax law changes affecting their tax liability. Subsequent cases, such as Westwick v. Commissioner, have applied this ruling, solidifying the principle of retroactive tax law application to installment sales.
