Azar Nut Co. v. Commissioner, 94 T. C. 455 (1990)

Losses from the sale of a house purchased from an employee under an employment contract are treated as capital losses, not ordinary losses, under Section 1221.

Summary

In Azar Nut Co. v. Commissioner, the Tax Court ruled that a loss incurred by a company on the resale of a house it purchased from a terminated executive was a capital loss, not an ordinary loss. Azar Nut Co. had agreed to buy the house at fair market value as part of the executive's employment contract. After termination, the company sold the house at a loss and sought to deduct it as an ordinary business expense. The court, guided by the Supreme Court's decision in Arkansas Best Corp. v. Commissioner, determined that the house was a capital asset under Section 1221, and thus the loss was subject to capital loss limitations.

Facts

Azar Nut Co. employed Thomas Frankovic as an executive under a contract that required the company to purchase his El Paso house at fair market value if his employment was terminated. After two years, Azar terminated Frankovic due to unsatisfactory performance and bought the house for $285,000. Despite efforts to resell, the house remained unsold for two years and was eventually sold for $185,896, resulting in a loss of $111,366. Azar claimed this loss as an ordinary loss on its tax return, but the IRS disallowed it, treating it as a capital loss.

Procedural History

The IRS issued a deficiency notice to Azar Nut Co. for $51,228. 38, disallowing the $111,366 loss as an ordinary deduction. Azar appealed to the U. S. Tax Court, which heard the case on a stipulated record and ruled in favor of the Commissioner, determining the loss to be a capital loss.

Issue(s)

1. Whether the loss incurred by Azar Nut Co. on the resale of the house purchased from Frankovic is deductible as an ordinary loss under Section 162(a) or Section 165(a).

Holding

1. No, because the house was a capital asset under Section 1221, and the loss on its sale is therefore a capital loss subject to the limitations of Section 165(f).

Court's Reasoning

The court applied the Supreme Court's ruling in Arkansas Best Corp. v.

© 2025 SCOTUSreports.com. All rights reserved.

Commissioner, which clarified that a property's status as a capital asset under Section 1221 is determined without regard to its connection with the taxpayer's business. The house was a capital asset because it did not fall under any of the statutory exceptions to Section 1221, and Azar did not intend to use it in its business. The court rejected Azar's arguments that the loss should be treated as an ordinary and necessary business expense or an ordinary loss, citing that the house was purchased for fair market value and not as compensation or for business use. The court emphasized that the nature of the property as a capital asset dictated the tax treatment of the loss.

Practical Implications

This decision reinforces the principle that losses from the sale of assets acquired under employment contracts are generally treated as capital losses, impacting how companies structure such agreements and report losses for tax purposes. It also highlights the importance of considering the tax implications of contractual obligations to purchase personal property from employees. Businesses must carefully consider whether such properties will be treated as capital assets and plan accordingly for the potential tax consequences of any losses. This ruling influences subsequent cases by solidifying the application of Arkansas Best Corp. to similar fact patterns and may affect how companies negotiate and draft executive employment contracts to mitigate tax risks.

© 2025 SCOTUSreports.com. All rights reserved.